Tribe Profile

Chashan - Cayamavana tribe is located in the southernmost territory of Alishan, Taiwan. It is the aboriginal tribe of Tsou, Bunun and Han tribes. A long time ago, the Takppuyangu (ancient community) call this place the "Cha Ya Ma Vana," a Zou dialect, which means "the plain on the mountainside". During the Japanese occupation, it was called "Cha Ya Ma" and after the restoration of Taiwan, since "Cha Ya Ma" sounds similar to "Yama," it was called "Chashan".

The Culture of Sharing and Gladness

Walking around "Cha Ya Ma Vana" tribe such as its many pavilions, each with a thatched roof. These are called "HuFu" in the Zou language. These represent the traditional sharing culture. In past times, meat obtained from hunting was brought to the "HuFu" and shared among the families of the village. Today, a bunch of plantains are placed in the pavilions. Those that pass by are welcome to take one, but before doing so should utter a phrase of appreciation, specifically "Aveoveoyu" in the Zou language., this word means "I'm pleasant." It's kind of a greeting like we use to say.
